Learning Through Practice: The best education is based on empirical knowledge...

Marcus didn't marry a witch, but like many a newlywed husband before him, he was pretty certain his hostile mother-in-law had to be some sort of occultist. And he was right. She also had some odd ideas about how men needed to be taught the techniques of pleasing a woman in the bedchamber, and she wasted no time in putting her pedagogical theories into effect...

Holy cow... I knew Melissa was a bit kinky, but I never imagined anything like this. Her mom turned me into an actual woman, with honest-to-god breasts and a pre-moistened love tunnel. Hell, with this figure and all this long hair, I'm even hotter than my wife is.

Then the two of 'em tie me up and just leave me here? What's up with that? How the heck am I supposed to learn anything, lying here helpless in a female body? It's not like I was ever into bondage the way she is.

You just relax, sweetheart. I'll be back in a jiffy. Mumsy is going to turn me into just the kind of man she hoped I would marry—very handsome and well-endowed, she tells me—and then I'm supposed to "show you how it's done", whatever that means. She says when I become male, she'll make sure I know exactly what to do to make you scream with pleasure and beg for more. That does sound like fun, doesn't it? Not that you'll be able to do much begging or anything while you're gagged, but I'm sure you'll be feeling it on the inside.

Oh my god... seriously? This is how I'm supposed to learn how to please my wife in bed? And won't I be too busy having multiple orgasms to remember any of it? This is so not the way to cram for a test!

Marcus learned how to perform sexually as a woman, and Melissa learned to make love as a man. Her mother gave her the power to transform herself and Marcus at will, and in the years to come they loved no other way.